

How to use “Raise Hand” Feature in Zoom

The “Raise Hand” feature alerts the meeting organizer that you would like to talk. This is especially helpful in large meetings, where the host may have a hard time monitoring who is trying to speak if they are raising their hands in real life, and are hoping that the host sees them. Once the meeting has more than 25 participants it will display as multiple pages of videos, and there is real risk that a participant signaling with their actual hand (as opposed to the Zoom “Raise Hand”) will be on the second page where the organizer can’t see them at all. It also appears that, when you raise your hand, your name goes to the top of the participant list where it is easier to see you.

1. Hover mouse at the bottom of the Zoom screen and click on “Reactions”

2. Click “Raise Hand”

3. Confirm that hand is raised and lower it when you're done

You should see a hand icon in the top corner of your screen showing that your hand is raised (likely inside of the picture of you, not the full screen).

When you are done speaking, you can lower your hand in the same place where you raised it.
